To Whom It May Concern,

My name is Kamau Kokayi and I am a graduate of Yale Medical school ('82) and practitioner of several "complementary and alternative" healing arts, including Chinese medicine, Classical homeopathy, and neuromodulation technique (NMT), as taught in the NMT seminars and manuals. This is my nineteenth year of clinical practice and I am currently the Medical Director of the Olive Leaf Wholeness Center, the largest independent, integrative medical center in the New York city metropolitan area. I oversee this clinical facility with some sixteen part and full time health professionals.

I have incorporated NMT, as taught in the NMT seminars and manuals, into my practice for nearly two years and have encouraged other members of my staff to pursue this course of study, with three of them participating in NMT seminars. I have been very pleased to see that NMT works as is disclosed in the NMT seminars and manuals. I have used it in a wide range of cases that have included infectious illnesses, painful injuries, metabolic disorders, allergies, toxicity states, auto immune disease, and a host of cases in which the presenting complaints could not be linked to any appreciable, measurable pathology. NMT has been a useful tool in assisting me to correct both functional and pathological disease states in my clients.

One of my patients had a recurrence of a mediastinal lymphoma which moved into her neck creating a rock hard mass affecting her range of motion. After two months of NMT treatment the mass was barely detectable to the visible eye and on palpation it had taken on a more rubbery consistency. Repeated biopsies were only positive for scar tissue and the patient was able to avoid radiation therapy. While this case may seem dramatic, NMT is quite a useful tool in assisting with everyday family practice problems such as low back pain, allergy, and headache. NMT, as taught in the NMT seminars and manuals is an extremely useful and revolutionary technique that I use daily in my practice.

Sincerely,

Kamau Kokayi MD Medical Director App# 10/662,960 Statement # 34
